

University of Illinois at Springfield ECCE Speakers Series

Overview

The Engaged Citizenship Common Experience Speakers Series is a one-hour course that is part of the Engaged Citizenship Common Experience (ECCE), the distinctive set of courses taken by undergraduates at UIS to foster the appreciation for and practice of diversity and the active effort to make a difference in the world. The ECCE Speakers Series is designed to complement the other categories of coursework in the curriculum. Those categories include:

- Comparative Societies
- U.S. Communities
- Global Awareness
- Engagement Experience
- ECCE Elective

The ECCE Speakers Series supplements the learning that occurs in the other ECCE coursework and reflects the aims of the curriculum. To receive one hour of credit, students must attend or participate in four lectures or events and reflect on them in writing. Students have a series of lectures to choose from each semester.

UIS offers both on-ground and on-line degree programs, so lectures and events are offered in a variety of formats. In some cases online students will be encouraged to participate in real time by watching the event via live webcast and “emailing in” questions to be answered in real time. Live Blackboard chats will also be conducted with online students during some events.

Information for Speakers

Honorarium and Travel Expenses

The UIS Office of Undergraduate Education will work with the speaker or the speaker’s agent to determine the appropriate honorarium for services rendered. Honoraria are subject to University of Illinois guidelines available at <http://www.obfs.uillinois.edu/obfshome.cfm?level=1&Path=honoraria&XMLData=honoraria1>.

In most cases travel expenses and lodging will be either covered or reimbursed. The UIS Office of Undergraduate Education can assist speakers with travel arrangements, including hotel reservations and transportation to and from the airport.

The University of Illinois has a standard contract form UIS needs to execute that includes contractor certification clauses required by the State of Illinois. For speakers who have a contract form, the UIS Office of Undergraduate Education can incorporate that document as an addendum to the UIS contract.

As a state government entity, the University's practice is not to pay before services are rendered.

Audience

The primary audience for the speakers is undergraduate students, although interested faculty, staff members, and graduate students, and even community members, may attend the lectures. Students are encouraged to take the ECCE Speaker Series course while completing or after having completed at least one other ECCE course. The lecture may touch on any of the aims of the curriculum, which include helping students to:

- Recognize the social responsibility of the individual within a larger community.
- Practice awareness of and respect for the diversity of cultures and peoples in this country and in the world.

Version: 050108

- Reflect on the ways involvement, leadership, and respect for community occur at the local, regional, national, or international levels.
- Identify how economic, political, and social systems operate now and have operated in the past.
- Engage in open-minded and ethical decision-making and action.
- Distinguish the possibilities and limitations of social change.

Students may need terms defined, and theoretical discussions will likely be most useful to the audience when presented in clear and straightforward language.

ECCE is an interdisciplinary curriculum, and so offering multiple perspectives or discussing the intersections of disciplinary approaches is encouraged.

Presentation Length and Style

Speaking events may range in length, but should fall between 30 to 45 minutes, followed by a 20 minute question and answer period/ discussion. Speakers are encouraged to use interactive approaches that involve the audience in discussion and/or in activities related to the topic.

Technology

Speakers may choose from a range of technology to support the event, including computer and projector, DVD or VCR, internet access, overhead projector, slide projector, etc. If speakers prefer, they may bring laptops; projector hook-up will be available. Technology assistance will be provided by UIS staff.

Media Consent

UIS plans to audio and videotape all lectures presented in the Speaker Series to permit live webcasting and to make available video on demand, audio podcasts, and DVDs after the event. Speakers must agree to the recording of their presentations for these educational purposes.

Contact Information

The UIS Office of Undergraduate Education is responsible for arranging four lectures each semester for the ECCE Speakers Series. Staff in the office oversee the registration of students, record student attendance, and organize the evaluation of student reflections on the lectures.

Speakers who have questions are welcome to contact Kimberly Craig, the Coordinator of the ECCE Speaker Series, at kcrai01s@uis.edu or by phone at (217) 206-6245. A website for the ECCE Speakers Series is under development.
