You can find crayons for fifty centers and notebooks for a dollar during back to school shopping season. But it's a price not everyone can afford.

That's why kids at the Cox Children's Center on the UIS campus have been collecting paper, pencils, crayons, and pretty much everything else: to give to the less fortunate.

The center has used the collection drive as a chance to teach the kids about helping those in need.

"It makes me sad," says seven-year-old Caleb Hoffman, "Because alot of people don't have school supplies and won't be good learners."

The supplies will go to UIS students who are parents and need a little extra help this time of year.
